

Q Should India adopt presidential form of government?

Harsha Sengupta

100 W.

Presidential form of government is one in which president and his council of ministers enjoys more power. In India there is parliamentary form of govt where parliament is more powerful. Parliamentary form of govt has is more efficient as:-

- There is smooth functioning due to less conflict b/w executive and legislative.
- There is less chance of dictatorship.
- There is less corruption due to checks and balance.
- The representation of such diverse nation is only possible in parliamentary form of govt.

The above advantages are not possible in presidential form of govt. Hence, for better co-ordination and effective representation of every section of India parliamentary form of govt is best suited.
