

How the qualities of neutrality & non-partisan contribute to the success of a civil servants? (150 words)

A civil servant is supposed to discharge his duties in a way that they are result in the best for public interest. Neutrality and non-partisanship being the most important quality for a success of civil servant.

As already mentioned above 'Public interest' is the main objective of any action performed in the capacity of a civil servants. Being neutral in the actions and not favouring any particular person's interest or any political party will only allow a civil servant to become a successful civil servant.

If any one is inclined towards a political party which is in power then after change in the government might not result in favourable situations for the civil servant.

The actions of civil servants must be clear and transparent. He must ~~for~~ work which in a way that does not affect any political ideology or sentiments of the people.

A successful civil servant must act in a neutral way, free from political pressure and in the interest of the public. He must be courageous enough to take decisions in the best possible manner which reflects his public commitment towards public interest. ✓
