

Q:- What is communalism? What are the reasons of communalism in India? How it can be curbed in India?

200 WL

Ans:- Communalism is a state or condition in India where ~~are~~ conflicts arise on the basis of religions, caste and different communities. Communalism is common in India, as, India is the land of various cultures and traditions. ~~Since~~ Since various cultures and tradition followers are present, they often ~~can~~ have conflicts with the people of some other culture and tradition which leads to very pathetic situation in the country.

The major reason for communalism in India is the vast differences between the numbers of communities and their myths regarding religious events taking place. Different people from different communities are more directed in improving their community or religion a superior from other in terms of power, unity and people representation in the religious events and functions. This highly stabilize their minds for their own religion.

rather than being neutral and giving equal status to every religion.

Communal practices can be effectively subdued if the religious heads of different religion emphasis on the unity and peace with all the people of other religions too.

Making people realise that the true and efficient growth of the country can be ^{possible} through the unity of all religions.

Many effective groups can be formed which include the ~~own~~ personalities or religious heads together. This will bring change in the mindset of the people and unite them with time.

These kinds of initiatives will be more suitable for the religion oriented people in India.

V. Govil