Q3) What is PPP? Critically analyse its success in context of India?

The PPP, or Public Private Partnership is an agreement between government and private sector for a public related work. Under this the government gets tech, investment + private sector management. The private sector gets more economic opportunity and as a result, the public is benefitted. The P3 concept is a "start high" concept in which the initial cost is high but the later services are pricier + qualitatively good.

14.5 CM

PPP's have played a vital role in enhancing the economic growth in India. Combining the professionalism of the corporate sector with the welfare objectives of the government has resulted in projects such as Mumbai Air Metro, Delhi Airport Metro which are known for their world class facilities and advanced amenities. Some more examples include Ahli-Abida DND Line Road, (Bhub), Second Vokkalong Bridge Kolkata, underground car parking system Kolkata etc.

PPP's in India have ensured the speedy and cost effective completion of several projects. They have integrated public infrastructure with superior financing & maintenance, it has generated jobs as well.

But the biggest loophole in the good going success of PPP's in India is that there is NO provision of fast track mechanism for solving the PPP related disputes exists in India. Also, the ever increasing corruption, red tapism prevailing in the Blood of India hampers the growth process. Also PPP's in India is confined to a limited products/fields only for eg in Infrastructural developments it is in the need to be extended to other fields of public welfare.

ultimately, apart from the drawbacks PPP's is a win-win situation for all everybody and for the emerging economies like India, it will soon gain the momentum which it needs.
